CREATIVE TEACHING IDEA:

Here's an idea for a review game for older children or maybe even teens:

Divide the group into two teams. (The children usually go for the "girls against boys" thing.) For each review question they get right, have the team add either a shape or a piece of a picture puzzle on a flannelgraph board. The team that gets all the pieces up first wins. Simple enough? Add a little twist. When the team gets a question right, let them choose between adding to their side or taking a piece away from the other team.

For scoring, have the team that completes their side first get a preset number of points – no points for either team if no one reaches the goal. This will encourage them to allow the opposite teams to build their side up a bit before starting to choose the take-one-away option. Have a predetermined number of questions so the game doesn't go on forever.
