VIX trades opposite of SPY. VIX can give clues of what the SPY may do next. Back in October 2018, the SPY made a lower low and VIX matched its previous high and a bullish divergence for the SPY suggesting a low. In November early December the SPY matched its previous low and VIX made a higher high suggesting SPY may make a lower low (and it did). The SPY is matching its December high and the VIX is making a lower low compared to its December low and a bullish divergence. This condition suggests the SPY may not retrace much of its advance and once the retracement is done, the VIX suggests the SPY will exceed its December higher (the 2800 SPX range). Market could flip sideways. We will wait for a clearer setup. Join us on twitter.

The top window is the 100 hour moving average of the tick. When 100 tick is above “0” than generally the SPX is moving higher and below “0” market may be moving lower. The 100 hourly tick has turned down but is still above “0”, suggesting market is weakening but still in uptrend. The bottom window is the 30 hour moving average and the same rules apply. This shorter term moving average has fell below “0” and a short term bearish sign. Next window up is the hourly Cumulative tick. The cumulative tick rises and falls as the SPX rises and falls. Over the last couple of weeks the cumulative tick increased its angle of rising, showing strength, but over the last couple of days it has rolled over and nearing its moving average. The SPX has reached its November, December higher near 2800 range and a resistance area. The different configurations of the tick are starting to show weakness. Support is near the 200 day moving average which is near the 2725 SPX range. Follow us on twitter. @OrdOracle

Here is the monthly GLD chart (ETF for Gold). The pattern forming appears to be a Head and Shoulders bottoms where the Head formed at the 2016 low. Right Shoulder appear near completion and testing the "Neckline". For confirmation of a Head and Shoulders bottom a "Sign of Strength" through the "Neckline" is needed. A "Sign of strength" is a high volume wide price spread through the "Neckline" price. Looking at the monthly price volume from the low in November 2018, market has been up four months in a row (green bars) which is showing strength. GLD could hesitate near current prices, but a surge in strength should commence in the coming weeks to confirm the Head and Shoulders bottom. The top window is the monthly RSI for GLD; readings above 50 suggest GLD is in an uptrend and the current reading is 57.31. Long GDX on 1/29/19 at 21.97. www.ord-oracle.com.
