SPY is running into the February high (So far the SPX has not touched the February High). SPY is matching the February high and the VIX is making a higher low which at the moment is a divergence. The SPY was up 7 days in a row going into yesterday. This much price momentum suggests a higher high will be seen in the next five days. Therefore if the tick and trin reach extreme levels, a bullish short term setup could form for a rally above the February high. This potential rally above the February could setup an intermediate term sell signal if the VIX fails to break below its February low while the SPY is above its February high. The above chart is on a weekly time frame. The bottom window is the 3 week average of the Equity Put/Call ratio; Reading below .52 have been bearish, current reading is .49. The second window down from the top is the weekly RSI. Notice the October 2018 tested the previous January high and produced an RSI divergence which produced the late year decline. Weekly SPX is now testing the February high and so far there is an RSI divergence. SPX needs to keep rallying for the RSI divergence to go away, which is unlikely. Market could be setting up for a September decline. Join us on twitter. @OrdOracle

On today's decline the Volume Jumped near 50% compared to the previous day's volume. A jump in volume of 30% or greater compared to the previous days volume suggests a "Selling Climax". We have marked two previous days going back to April where volume jumped near 30% or greater on a decline. This "Selling Climax" day usually marks a worthwhile low and since today's "Selling Climax" looks to be over a 50% expansion in volume would suggest a rally back to the recent highs if not higher. We remain intermediate term bullish. Long GDX on 7/8/20 at 38.62. www.ord-oracle.com. New Book release "The Secret Science of Price and Volume" by Timothy Ord, buy www.Amazon.com.
